Of course I am very sorry to learn that it is necessary for you to take a two month's leave. However, please do not feel that I am the slightest bit provoked about the situation. As a matter of fact, if it is necessary for you to have this rest, I think it would be exceptionally foolish of you not to take it and very selfish of me not to be more than willing for you to have it.

I am more than grateful for your outstanding devotion to duty and performance, and I should not consider for a moment filling your position with anyone else as long as you want it.

[REDACTED] advises me that you have enough sick and annual leave to carry you up to around 1 July 1948, and you may rest assured that your job will still be here for you at that time. I expect to get another girl to fill one of our existing vacancies, and by shuffling things around a bit we can get by until Bea returns. Since I will be gone for almost six weeks after she returns, I think that we can get by without too much difficulty.

Be sure to forget about the office completely, relax as much as possible and enjoy yourself. Of course, we will always be very interested to know how you are getting along and if there is anything at all that I can do for you, please do not hesitate to let me know.

Sincerely,

L. K. WHITE
